Director Dante Tomaselli merges two disturbing storylines in this visually arresting chiller. The first involves a band of five teens that escapes from a drug rehabilitation center to cash in on a questionable promise of salvation from the psychopathic Reverend Salo, Jr. (Vincent Lambert). Leader of the pack, Luck (Danny Lopes), fueled by major hallucinogens, transports the gang to the reverend's isolated house where a simultaneous second plot is evolving.

Here lives Grace (Lizzy Mahon), Salo, Jr.'s daughter, whom he and his equally bizarre wife (Christie Sanford) have enslaved through forced drug addiction and psychic brainwashing. Grace's only salvation appears to be the guidance of her paternal grandfather, Reverend Salo, Sr. (The Amazing Kreskin). But hope is quickly jeopardized when it is revealed that Salo, Sr.'s comforting visitations are from beyond the grave.

Through her visions, Grace learns of her parent's demonic pastimes, which include abduction, murder, and worse. Shortly after the arrival of the rehab escapees, Luck shoots and kills Salo, Jr. and his wife. This eruption of bloody violence is a catalyst for the unleashing of dark forces including torture, a chamber of horrors, and murderous attacks by a demonic satanic goat and an army of zombies.

This is a nightmarish universe where nothing is what it seems. The ambiguous ending is left open for interpretation, with a guarantee of being intriguing and darkly nihilistic.
